Memphis Mardi Gras. The approaching Mardi Gras will be cele brated in this city with unusual eclat by the Memph, Ulks and other organizations, all of which are preparing for the great carnival. Scarcely a night passes but what strange sounds are heard and unaccountable things and beings seen both in the city and in the river. Only last night a star was seen to shoot across the sky in a southwesterly direc-tion, and buried its brilliant form in the wa-ters of the Mississippi. In less than five minutes three silver barges, with marble masts and golden sails glided silently past the city in the silence of night. Just above the prow of one of the barges were illuminated prow of one of the barges were illuminated diamonds, rubies, pearls, etc., forming the word Memph. Of course these barges belong to the royal fleet, and were journeying somewhere along the dark waters on official business. It is said that during the progress of the steamer Fanchon, on which was Cole's circus and menagerie, the officers and crew saw these barges several times during the night. One of the barges was laden with precious stones, but the largest bore a crew of uncouth shapes, whose arms were long and crooked. During Monday night one of the arges came alongside the steamer Fanchon, and before the officers were aware of the proceedings, the strange creatures seized the handsome band chariot of Cole's circus, and lifting the vehicle from the hurricane roof transferred it to the deck of the mysterious boat. The alarm was given, but too late, for the barge with the handsome chariot sank under the stream, and for five minutes or more the triumphant chorus of the Memphi crew could be heard under the waves, the strain being broken now and then by the splash of the water and the rush of the stream. The last line of the chorus of the crewiwas, Tyh eilcon inige teme mhi ta Mem-phi, the signification of which no one knows. The band chariot was valued at twenty-five indred dollars, and at the time of its demand by the mystic beings was full of trapping and gear. There can no longer be any doubt as to the public favor which Aimee enjoys in this city, after the plaudits she received last night from one of the largest and most brilliant audiences that ever assembled in the Memphis Theater. And she deserved them; proving, as she did, additional claims to the favor she won here several years are the favor she jewelry found in the possession of Williams won here several years ago. MRS, DEGRAY BENNETT, the well-known | The Negro Thief who Shot and so Severely Wounded Detective Pryde Arrested on a Charleston Railroad Train.

> Confronted with the Wounded Officer. he Confesses his Crimes of Robbery and Attempted Murder In Jail, he Awaits Trial.

Yesterday morning the negro burglar, Jack Williams, who shot Detective Pryde the day previous, was arrested on the outgoing train of the Charleston railroad and returned to this city. No sooner had the news of the arrest of the burglar been received than large numbers of men and boys began to flock to the Adams street stationhouse in order to get a sight of the thief. The crowd present was estimated at from three to four hundred persons, and the liveliest interest was manifested. It seems that Williams, upon leaving the city, took the track of the Charleston railroad, walking as far as Buntyn's station, where he awaited the arrival of the eastern passenger train which left here at eleven o'clock in the night. Before the train left, Captain Weatherford, of the police force, visit at the Charleston depot and gave the conductors and employes a descri-tion of the fugitive. When the train reach Buntyn's station Williams entered the redoor of the sleeping car, and was immediately recognized by the sleeping-car conductor, John O. Armistead, who went into the forward coach, where he informed Conductor amsay. The conductors, with two of the train men, then proceeded to the sleeper and with drawn pistols told Williams that he had to be tied, as they knew him and would shoot if he moved. Williams made no resistance, and was firmly williams made no resistance, and was firmly tied with a strong rope by the conductors, who were only too glad to capture him. Shortly after being tied, Williams told the conductors that he would give them one thousand dollars cash if they would release him and let him escape. This proposition was declined, but it caused a search to be made of Williams's pockets, and the result made of Williams's pockets, and the result was the finding and recovery of two thou-sand four hundred and three dollars and five cents in money, five gold watches and chain, alued at three hundred dollars, and a dianond pin and ear-rings valued at two thouand dollars, which had been stolen from Mr. Louis Kaufman's residence, on Exchange street. Williams was sent back to this city on the incoming train, and reached here about five o'clock yesterday morning. He stoutly denied any knowledge of the robbery and shooting of Detective Pryde. When Detectives Smith and M Cune started with Williams to the residence of Detective Pryde they found it difficult to press through the crowd to the hack in front of the Adams street stationhouse. When the prisoner was street stationhouse. When the presence of carried into the presence of Detective Pryde the latter said: "That's the man." Williams said: "Yes, I shot you, Mr. Pryde." and began to cry and beg for mercy. Wil-lines aid, moreover, that after flooing from the Linden street house he fired one shot at a negro who endeavored to arrest him. He says it was not his intention to shoot De-ective Pryde, but had to do so because the officer was trying to shoot him. He denies having entered Kaufman's house, but says that the girl Annie Shine stole the money and jewelry from the bureau and brought them to him in the alley near by. He carried the articles and money to the resi-dence of the negro Charles Johnson, on Jackson street, where the spoils were divided Williams receiving the lion's share. Wilspoons and knives, which were stolen from Mr. Kaufman. All of the above property and money was yesterday restored to Mr. Kaufman.. Williams's real name is said to be Crockett Brown, and it is also reported that he at one time was a deputy sheriff in Arkansas. When Mr. Kaufman mentioned the robbery, it was not seriously regarded by the officers, but upon the statemen of two negroes, Coleman and Houston Semmes, to Henry Jordan colored, they at once proceeded to have the affair investigated. Yesterday Emma and Charles Johnson, Annie Shine, Houston Semmes and Lewis Hall, all colored, were arraigned on the charge of being implicated in the burglary and sent to jail by Justice Winters, to remain until Saturday, when a full investigation will be had. HELENA, ARK., January 21 .- Nearly three weeks of unusual quiet has passed since th Christmas holidays, and, I am happy to say, without adding another of those foul murders, five of which dyed indelibly black the five weeks preceding them. Think of it! In this ivilized age five human souls hurled sudden ly into eternity in the short space of five weeks in one little town and vicinity! And bear witness, ye outrage-loving New York Times and Chicago Inter-Ocean, three of these murders were committed by fiendish egroes upon innocent and defenseless white men, and but one arrest has or is ever likely to be made, until the negro officials of the to be made, until the negro officials of this county are superseded by intelligent, honest white men. The one arrest which was made occurred under the most shameful circumstances. Tom White, a notorious negro character of this place, who kept a kind of restances and baker shop, had a young man named Bridges, just arrived from Illinois, to take lodgings with him. The following morning, Bridges, upon settling his bill lacked twenty-five cents of having the requisite amount, and for this trivial sum, as your site amount, and for this trivial sum, as your reporter learns it, and there seems no doubt to its authenticity, White drew his little pistol and deliberately shot his guest of the previous night down. White flourished his owitzer in the face of the negro police, and vamosed for parts unknown; Bridges was car-ried to the poorhouse, where every attention was given him, but the wound was mortal, and he soon died. The negroes, who composed most of the coroner's jury that sat upon the body, refused for the longest time to render any other verdict than that he came to his death from the effects of a pisto supposed to have been fired by Tom White, when there were witnesses present who positively swore that they saw him do the shooting, and I am not sure that they ever rendered any other verdict, in fact, don't think they did. But now comes the most disgraceful part of the story: White, a short time since, returned, and as I stated above, was captured, and shame to say, in the house of Austin Barrow, colored, a former high-sheriff of Phillips county, and, I am not positive, but think, its present as-sessor. He is also brother to present brother sessor. He is also brother to the jailer. I will do Barrow the justice to say that he came out in a card in one of the papers, denying that he was attempting to harbor White, who, he states, came to his house for the purpose of surrendering himself to the proper authorities—a very im-probable story, as Barrow adds in the same communication that White was his friend, and that he did not run after the reward as some others would have done. A short time some others would have done. A short time since I was boarding with a gentleman whose wife, during his absence, had occasion to refuse a notorious negro woman a pail of water, the cistern being very low. For this the ne-

John S. Fretwell, the Mississippi Fugitive, Makes Another Effort to Assassinate Sheriff Manning, of Tunica County.

> Only a short while ago we published an account of John S. Fretwell's attempt to assassinate the sheriff at Austin, Mississippi. Fretwell, who fired three shots or more at Sheriff Manning, escaped, and smee then has been in the woods and canebreaks. Last Monday night a man named Neblett approached anther near the courthouse corner in Austin, and discovered that the person was John S. Fretwell, who drew his pistol and ordered him into his house. Neblett compiled with this request, but managed to get out the back way and started to Sheriff Manning's resi-dence to tell him of Fretwell's presence, the supposed object of the latter's visit being to murder his intended victim who had escaped his bullets upon the former occasion. While on his way to the sheriff's, Niblett unexpectedly encountered Fretwell, who again ordered him to return to his house, which the former immediately did, but shortly thereafter proceeded to the river to board the Coahoma, on which steamer he expected to take passage. While on the bank of the river Neblett again met Fretwell, who drew a pistol and fired one shot at him. Neblett was fortunately missed by the bullet, but imme-diately after Fretwell fired, he approached the object of his aim, and said: "Damn you I thought it was Manning." Neblett you, I thought it was Manning." Neble was doubtless glad to escape such a mistake
